

Capital Area Transit

APC Ridership Study

Conducted by Tri-County Regional Planning Commission

May 2019

Introduction

To supplement the planning and data gathering capabilities of Capital Area Transit (CAT), TCRPC staff undertook an examination of Automatic Passenger Counter (APC) data to determine ridership based on geographic location. The following document provides a summary of the process by which this examination was developed, the methodology it followed, and the deliverables it produced.

Development

In Spring 2018, meetings were held between CAT, rabbittransit, and TCRPC staff members. After assessing CAT's needs and discussing a variety of options to obtain accurate ridership data, including hiring additional staff to perform physical counts, it was determined that using the APC data managed by Syncromatics was the preferable option. Based on budget, time, and staffing resources, four weeks of APC data would be examined, consisting of the weeks of April 1, April 8, May 13, and May 20.

Methodology

The examination began by downloading APC data directly from Syncromatics in the form of Microsoft Excel files containing over 450,000 records. Each record contained information on the route, stop, ridership ("on" and "off"), and time, as well as latitude and longitude coordinates. Unfortunately, the data had two inherent issues: 1) not all of the buses' counters were within the FTA guidelines for accuracy; and 2) the data was incredibly "messy" – the route and stop data was inconsistent, the ridership data contained extreme values, and the location of points appeared to not conform to existing routes and stops.

To address the first issue, all data from buses with APC variance (obtained from Syncromatics) of greater than 5% were disregarded. APC Variance is determined by comparing weekly "on" totals with weekly "off" totals. Buses whose values were 5% or less were deemed "accurate" and included in the analysis. Throughout the four weeks, the number of buses deemed "accurate" were generally consistent, ranging from approximately 39% to 45% of the fleet. To address the second issue, a comprehensive review and "clean up" was undertaken. This effort included removing points that were extraneous, had no ridership data, or had extreme ridership values, and recoding the routes for all remaining points.

After removing the points associated with "inaccurate" buses and the comprehensive data processing, our final ridership data set consisted of approximately 125,000 points. Because inaccurate buses were removed from the dataset, APC ridership totals would differ from CAT's existing farebox data. To align these values, the APC totals were compared to farebox totals by route for each week, resulting in a factor by which the APC total would be multiplied by to represent total ridership. Appendix 1 summarizes the results of this process.

Using GIS analysis, the bus stop nearest each ridership point was determined and assigned to that ridership point. The ridership totals were then totaled by bus stop by route and presented as both a table and an ArcGIS Online webmap. The tables containing this data are found in Appendix 2. The webmaps displaying this data were provided to CAT staff upon completion.

After subsequent discussions with CAT staff, it was determined that the analysis should also include “time of day”. The tables containing this data are found in Appendix 3. Webmaps displaying this data as overall system ridership heat maps by hour were provided to CAT staff upon completion.

Conclusion

The goal of this project was to provide Capital Area Transit with data representing the geographic distribution of their ridership - where and when people were getting on and off the bus. This data was provided in the form of both tables and dynamic webmaps. This data was provided to assist in ongoing, existing and enable new short- and long-range transit planning activities.

While specific conclusions/recommendations were not a primary goal, some became readily apparent during the process and after examination of the deliverables. The most important of these conclusions was that capacity to manage and process ridership data is extremely important to ensure CAT’s long-term efficiency and sustainability. Geographically, CAT’s ridership is dominated within urban core of the City of Harrisburg and the immediately adjacent communities. Chronologically, CAT’s ridership is dominated by the morning and evening commuting hours, indicating Harrisburg commuters to be the largest segment of CAT ridership. Conversely, ridership is relatively low in areas outside the Harrisburg urban core, even in areas with a large warehousing/logistical industry presence, indicating what we know to be true through our other planning activities – these areas are a tremendous opportunity to address unmet demands within the region.

This summary is intended to provide an overview of the key activities of the analysis. For more information on the study or TCRPC’s transit planning, please contact:
